I'd like to know how to make Visual Studio look at my existing code when I open the solution file. It always downloads the version of the project that I just closed. A: i) Open your solution file in a text editor. ii) Check that there is only one project in the project file - if so, delete it. iii) Look for the node inside the project file (usually inside the node). This node specifies the site which is to be compiled. You can add other sites to your project using the nodes. iv) Right-click the node and select Properties. v) In the Web tab, open the setting for UseLocalIISExpress to true. vi) Close the properties window. vii) Restart Visual Studio so that the project is recompiled. viii) Open your solution in Visual Studio and it should show your site. A: If you are using Cassini, then you can set the UseLocalIISExpress to true. I am glad the poster is no longer on here, or I would have posted a link to his "Final Thoughts." Surely he realizes what he said in there is pure negativity. So it is a matter of time before he never posts here again. But let's just enjoy this dance he did for 50b96ab0b6
